Advisory:

- The Hornbill Festival has a central area where there are traditional songs and dances performed by each tribe. It also has a central shopping area where you can see and buy traditional arts and crafts made by people from all over the state. There is also a Naga Chef competition each year, where the top four finalists are given a stall each where they run a kitchen for guests to sample and rate their food - the winner of the competition is decided based on the billings and ratings at each stall over the ten days of the festival.
- Wear comfortable shoes because you will have to walk a lot around the festival area
- While at Kisama, you can visit 'morungs' of each of the tribes where you can study their architecture, dress, food and drink. There are 17 prominent tribes and each has its own Morung. A Morung traditionally is used as a dormitory where unmarried boys of the village are required to stay together and where the elders of the village teach them the lessons of life.
